description

Ultrafragola mirrorlamp, with its sinuous profile that suggests long wavy hair, belongs to the “The grey furniture” series of complete bedroom and living room furnishings designed by Ettore Sottsass for Poltronova and presented at the third edition of Eurodomus in 1970. With the exception of Ultrafragola, the models never got beyond the prototype phase.

«As for the lights that are coming out of “The grey furniture”, don’t tombs always have a trembling light to illuminate the blue of the spirits wandering in the valley of dust? Don’t submarines have a trembling green light in their belly? The lights anyway are supposed to come out from the fibreglass bodies, like the ever-glowing of the breast’s white skin, like the ever-glowing of the penis red head in pornographic nights, something of this kind: I mean something like the Japanese lights of the glow worm that are turning the nights into matter. Could anything be more ridiculous?» [Ettore Sottsass jr, 1970]

made in Italy
since 1970

Each Ultrafragola piece ever produced has been thermoformed from the single original aluminium mould of 1970. Ultrafragola consists of a mirror and a thermoformed translucent plastic frame which emits a pink light. Mounting and all the plastic components are finished by hand at the company, and it's also arranged to be hung on the wall if needed. The back panel is made of fireproof forex. Also, a unique numerical code, printed at the company onto the back of the item, certifies its authenticity and its being made in Italy.

As for the lights that emerge from the “gray furniture”, don’t tombs always have flickering lights that brighten the sadness of spirits wandering through the valley of dust? Don’t submarines have trembling green lights in their holds?

The lights are designed to come out of the fiberglass body, like the splendid whiteness of the skin of breasts, the glowing red of the head of a penis in the pornographic night, something of that sort – I mean something like Japanese fireflies, which transform May nights into solid matter. Could anything be more ridiculous?
